Picea omorika

Characteristics

Remarkably narrow, almost pillar-shaped pine tree. Not very fast growing, but ultimately reaching heights of well over 10 meters. The many branches on the main stem have a slight bend, and because all needles at the bottom have two broad grey stripes, the entire plant looks grey green.

Applications

Because of the narrow habitus, this Serbian fir is very suitable as a solitary, and it can also be planted in smaller gardens. In parks, they can often be found in groups. Its hardiness makes every position suitable. Also often grown as Christmas tree.
